Industrial design is a process of design applied to products that are to be manufactured through techniques of mass production. Its key characteristic is that design is separated from manufacture: the creative act of determining and defining a product's form and features takes place in advance of the physical act of making a product, which consists purely of repeated, often automated, replication.

The review, therefore, confirmed Blackman and Seagal's (1991) view that the task of creating a typology that shows all the possible links that could occur between universities and industry is an extremely difficult one. However, the framework proposed by Bonarccorsi and Piccaluga (1994) was found to be relatively broad in scope and considered suitable for adoption for this research.
