Last Heartbeat is a book that will remain with me for a long time. It was a beautiful story filled with so much love, emotional angst, feelings of despair at times, and hopefulness the next, as well as heartache in one form or another.

Last Heartbeat is written in dual POVs with alternating chapters between Alexia and Phillip. Most of the time I don't really mind this, but in this case, for the first half of the book Phillip's chapters were basically a repetition of Alexia's chapters with no new information.

For those who are interested and for anyone who hasn't seen it, the final episode of Heartbeat is being shown again tomorrow on ITV3 5.55pm, before the whole shebang rolls back to the bookmarked place in the saga, and begins again !

Last ever episode of 'Heartbeat' (again) tomorrow

Actually The Bill ran a decade longer than Heartbeat. But they should have done a proper send off show. Both The Bill and Last of The Summer Wine were treated much better and had less viewers than even this final series of Heartbeat has been bringing to ITV.
