Putters Are Not Pendulums. Putters do not swing vertically back and through along the target line. Because of lie angle, the proper putting stroke moves along an arcing path: slightly inside of the target line, back to square, then to the inside again after impact. The proper length putter correctly sets eye position just inside the target line,...

Stan Utley's Art of Putting advocates a stroke which is controlled by the turning of the shoulders rather than a tilt of the shoulders as suggested by Dave Pelz. Utley wants you to swing the putter around the axis of your spine, which means the putter naturally swings inside the line the backswing and the throughswing.

The Art of Putting. You are actually playing the putt in your head before you hit the ball and seeing it go in a couple of times will increase your confidence and give you a far greater chance of making it. Use this mental imagery to feel the speed with your practice strokes, which will pre-set the right tempo.
