Ancient Greek art stands out among that of other ancient cultures for its development of naturalistic but idealized depictions of the human body, in which largely nude male figures were generally the focus of innovation. The rate of stylistic development between about 750 and 300 BC was remarkable by ancient standards, and in surviving works is best seen in sculpture.

In the 5 th century BC, Greek Historian Herodotus wrote about the customs and traditions he witnessed while in Babylon. One of the more controversial customs he reports on is the Babylonian marriage market in which young women were gathered up and an auctioneer would get each of the women to stand up one by one, and he would put her up for sale.

5th century BC. Herodotus, The Histories, 2.101. In the city of Babylon, there was a market where young women were sold to the highest bidder. The women were often very young and beautiful, and they were sold to men from all over the world. The men who bought the women were often wealthy and powerful, and they used the women as concubines. The women who were sold in this market were often the daughters of poor people, and they were sold to men who were much richer than they were. This practice was very common in Babylon, and it was one of the things that made the city so famous.
